These, however, gen-erally stimulate them by dividing among them a small percentage of the proceeds of the crop. They are very docile. Their introduction has been profitable on the island, and those to whom I have spoken, (all planters and some Americans,) think planters, and some Americans,) think they will also do well in the Southern States. For farming, gardening and working machinery, they are excel-lent. This information is authentic."

JEFFERSON DAVIS.—A late English paper says Mr. Davis, the ex-President of the late Confederate States of America, is living in London, and is more-over, an object of great attraction to the fashionable world. One hears that his house is beseiged by callers, and invitations pour in on him in such abundance that he is unable to avail himself of The Underside Has before the receding flaures in the dim morning fight.
